http://article.nationalreview.com/434473/god-and-man-in-the-world/interview

Leonard Leo is chair of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, which late last month issued its annual report on the state of religious freedom in the world. With recommendations to Congress, they singled out Burma, China, North Korea, Eritrea, Iran, Iraq, Nigeria, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, and Vietnam as countries of “particular concern” because of their treatment of human rights. From Indonesia, Leo talked to National Review Online’s Kathryn Jean Lopez about the report, the mission of the commission, the state of religious liberty in the world, and why it should matter here.