

July 22, 2005: U.S. Strategic Dilemmas in Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

July 22, 2005

Contact: Julia Leikin (202) 775-3240 WASHINGTON - The U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) and the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) invite you to a public briefing on Wednesday, July 27 on "U.S. Strategic Dilemmas in Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan." The briefing will take place 3:00-5:00 p.m. in Room B1C on the B1 Conference Level at CSIS, 1800 K Street, NW, Washington, DC. In April 2005, as part of its 2005 CPC recommendations to Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, the Commission recommended that the State Department designate Uzbekistan a "country of particular concern" (CPC) for serious religious freedom violations. The Commission has recommended CPC status for Turkmenistan since 2001, although the State Department has not adopted that recommendation in past years. CPC designation carries with it the requirement to take follow-on policy actions, which can include the cancellation of economic and security assistance. To place the CPC recommendation in context, panelists will discuss the human rights situation in Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan, the nature of local extremist and terrorist threats, and U.S. and other strategic interests in the region. The panel will open with introductory remarks by USCIRF Commissioners. Panelists:

Stephen Blank, Strategic Studies Institute, U.S. Army War College
Daniel Kimmage, RFE/RL
Martha Brill Olcott, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace
Knox Thames, Helsinki Commission
Cory Welt, Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS)
