

<http://www.aina.org/news/20110331211600.htm>

These resolutions turned the liberal, half-century-old international human-rights regime on its head. "It deviates sharply from the historically rooted object of international human rights protections by addressing the interests of religious institutions and interpretations, rather than the rights of individuals," as Leonard Leo, chair of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) explained to Congress in 2009.