Summary

Executives of ASEAN in their capacity as member states have long recognized the importance of respecting freedom of religion or belief (FoRB). In 2017, the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) produced a report entitled "A Right for All: Freedom of Religion or Belief in ASEAN," which examined the state of FoRB in the 10 ASEAN member states. The report highlighted the need for greater efforts to protect the rights of religious minorities in the region.

The report found that while progress has been made in some countries, significant challenges remain. For example, in Myanmar, the government continues to place restrictions on religious expression and imposes strict controls on religious activities. In Thailand, the government has taken steps to improve FoRB, but challenges remain, particularly in respect to the rights of Muslims and religious minorities.

The report also recommended that ASEAN member states should work together to promote FoRB and develop common policies and strategies to address the challenges faced by religious minorities. It called for increased cooperation and coordination among ASEAN member states to ensure that FoRB is protected and respected in the region.

The report concluded that while progress has been made, there is still much work to be done to ensure that FoRB is protected and respected throughout ASEAN. It called on all ASEAN member states to continue to work together to promote FoRB and to ensure that all citizens have the right to practice their religion without fear of persecution or discrimination.
